Challenge...

Unfair research funding levels

• Lung cancer claims more lives than any other cancer, including breast, colon and pancreatic cancers combined.
• Nearly 160,000 American lives will be taken by lung cancer this year, yet research will be funded by as much as 20 times less than other cancers.
• Lack of funding drives talented young researchers away from lung cancer, despite their interest and commitment.

Our Response:

A Breath of Hope Research Fellowships were first announced to universities and cancer centers around the country in 2014. Through a national search, ABOHLF’s Review Panel continues to identify America’s finest scientists to receive salary support as they accomplish lifesaving lung cancer research.

Challenge...

Lack of awareness

• More than half of those diagnosed each year are nonsmokers at the time of diagnosis.
• Half of those diagnosed each year come from low income circumstances.
• 10-15% of new lung cancer cases each year are never smokers.
• Most lung cancer cases are found in stages III - IV.

Our Response:

The White Ribbon Awareness Program (WRAP) partners with hospitals and others to ‘WRAP’ awareness and wellness around communities. Through education, access to screening and culturally appropriate support groups, lives are saved.

A Breath of Hope Awareness Events teach the public about lung cancer, provide support to patients and their families, and raise money for life-saving research.

Challenge...

Societal blame

• The general public has been taught that only smokers die of lung cancer and they deserve their suffering. This societal belief creates ignorance which leads to missed symptoms, late diagnoses, and attitudes that hurt families.
• Oncologists report that many patients have no way to get to treatment and no one to support them as they face lung cancer, including seniors and people living in low income circumstances.

Our Response:

The A Breath of Hope Ambassador Program uses dedicated volunteers who have experienced cancer to provide rides, companionship and hope to newly diagnosed community members who face lung cancer without the support they need. Ambassadors also speak in public to provide lung cancer facts and healthy lung information.
